The thought is enough to make your blood curdle: to be convicted of a crime you didn't commit and be locked up in jail for years, maybe even till the end of your life. However, you're in luck if law professor Markus Haglund hears about your case, since he and his four students devote themselves to reviewing cases and freeing the unjustly sentenced. But what if the person who comes free actually is guilty?

Markus Haglund, 43, is a charismatic and brilliant legal mind, but a tormented, cynical human being. As a lawyer, he became a household name ten years ago when he defended an alleged murderer and got him off. Two days later the suspect raped and killed a young mother and her eight-year-old daughter. Markus quit practicing and spiraled out of control for years. Now he heads a law-school class that examines cases of convicted felons who claim they're innocent. Each of his students – Anna, Fia, Belal and Roger – has a strong personal motive for assuming this challenge. Markus and his team realize that they are often unleashing dangerous forces by delving into such cases. For the best way to prove someone's innocence is to find the true perpetrator. But the path to the truth is dangerous and paved with fear and lies. And sometimes you almost have to break the law in order to apply it...

Ensuring a never-ending source of conflict with Haglund is his ex-wife, State Prosecutor Ulrika Stiegler. Their personal war flares up anew when, in a live TV interview, he questions her judgment in the case of a young immigrant falsely accused of beating a person to death.

Top-lining "Verdict Revisited" is internationally acclaimed Swedish star Mikael Persbrandt, best known as Inspector Beck's colleague Gunvald in the hit Swedish crime series "Beck." The series provides solidly constructed, nail-bitingly suspenseful whodunits shot through with moral ambiguity. Another inimitably, absorbingly Scandinavian crime series!
