DIRECTOR'S NOTE:
 "GROW is an exposition of modern youth's existential fear of being. The expectations to you as an individual increase exponentially in a society that praises individualism. 'Who are you?' is no longer a question, but a threat. A gun to the head; and with that gun, we cast our protagonists out into the Universe. We place a microscope on the few, and through that, we see the entire world around us."

SYNOPSIS

When newbie stockbroker Adam is told of his father's death, he gets sucked into the world of his late father's biker environment captivated by its fast life compared to the everyday grey society.

Adam's structural life is mixed with his personal ambitions, desperate for power and fast recognition in the Danish drug market, where Adam's cousin Simon has already set roots. Their ultimate goal: to form a new drug cartel and become the country's biggest kingpins.

Along the way they must face immigration gangs, bikers, law enforcement, politicians and - last but not least - Adam's own brother Jakob. Having left his previous life behind, Jakob has joined an anti-drug division and is now given the chance to make a difference. But will he take it or will Adam thrive in his rise to power? Who of the brothers will succeed in the end?

GROW is a story about self-discovery and morale, set in an apathetic world that, at times, shows a dissident reflection on what happiness is.
